Back in the 1990s, researchers were looking into how children's brains would react to screen based play. In fact, the research done in 1998 was on children between the ages of 3 and 5 years. These children were given a computer game called Kid Computer \[[@CR11]\]. The computer game contained a joystick with which children would play. They would watch the progress bar moving upwards until it reached 100%. The game itself was a repetition of Pong. Researchers tried to measure the effect of game play on the developing brains of children. The study found that exposure to the computer game increased child's attention spans. They found that children became calmer and less aggressive after playing for up to 45 min at a time. In this study, children were mainly exposed to music and not to games. \[[@CR12]\] When it comes to the games themselves, some of them are harmless distractions for some time. Some of these games can be quite addictive. However, it is the games like 'Lights Out' and 'Flappy bird' that are far more troublesome to children. Lights out is
