UCI Radiation Oncology Program (ROP) in the treatment of patients with cancer. The program provides comprehensive services to patients. These services are comprised of radiation therapy and a variety of medical oncology services. In the planning and implementation of radiation therapy, the program shares resources with other programs to ensure that patients have the optimal care. Cancer services are coordinated with other programs to insure that cancer patients are treated with the most up-to-date care available. In addition, the program provides support for the basic, clinical, and administrative aspects of research. The Radiation Oncology Program supports the basic and clinical research activities of investigators throughout the UCI Health System. The program has 14 full-time faculty who are engaged in clinical research, most of whom are funded by NIH or other Federal sources, as well as a part-time Research Associate. During the current year, there were 942 patient treatments for radiation therapy alone and a total of 5,856 for all treatment modalities. A friend once recommended a diet that consisted of eating one small meal a day, three times a week. I did it for a week and didn't gain any weight. So, I did it for a month and no change. I did it for a year and no change. But, that week when I was eating one meal a day, I lost weight and noticed a distinct difference in the way I felt. Once I was on that diet, I could see the light at the end of the tunnel. I felt amazing. I think about dieting all the time. I used to have a horrible relationship with food, just like most people. I ate too much and at times would go on huge binges where I would eat way too much. My problem was I could never get back in control. But, you don't have to be like I was. You can make changes in your life. I will show you how. My problem was that I didn't understand that I was lazy. I was doing way too much and was expecting myself
