The risk of a recurrent pulmonary embolism is high, making follow-up necessary for several months. The therapeutic approach to pulmonary embolism is not standardized. However, preventive anticoagulant treatment should be discussed when there is a high risk of recurrence or a high risk of bleeding due to concomitant pathology. The choice of an initial therapeutic approach to pulmonary embolism can be guided by clinical presentation, presence of deep vein thrombosis, and Wells and Hemker scores, which reflect the risk of a pulmonary embolism. In patients with a low risk of a pulmonary embolism, oral anticoagulant therapy can be discussed. In patients with an intermediate or high risk of a pulmonary embolism, a low molecular weight heparin, a direct oral anticoagulant or an intravenous unfractionated heparin can be discussed. In patients with a high risk of a pulmonary embolism and a contraindication to anticoagulation, a crossover inferior vena cava filter can be discussed. If therapeutic strategies are appropriate, the outcome of a pulmonary embolism can be improved, particularly for patients at high risk.Q: Understanding PHP Array Ternary Operator I'm a beginner in programming and I've been trying to get my head around PHP for two weeks now.
