(AP) — A North Carolina Republican lawmaker has called for an investigation into the #MeToo movement after the state's Democratic governor announced a probe into sexual harassment allegations against two of the state's top elected officials. Rep. Mark Cole, R-Jackson, North Carolina, said Friday that he wants to see an investigation into the #MeToo movement and whether the movement's "victims made false charges." Gov. Roy Cooper has said his administration will investigate claims against now-former Rep. John Swallow, who is accused of sexually harassing female legislative staffers. He said last month that former state Sen. Jerry Tillman would be investigated over allegations he made sexual advances on a teenage girl after she was married to a prominent political figure. Cole on Friday did not give details about what investigation he wants. In a statement Friday, Cole said the state's investigators need to ask questions like why the movement was started, why now and how to properly measure its impact. "It's time to put a stop to this movement," Cole said. "It's one thing to have a wrong being righted. But it's entirely another to continue to admit people because the movement is successful."
