temperature detecting circuit of semiconductor integrated circuit for the purpose of detecting temperature by a system similar to a Wheatstone bridge circuit. The invention is applicable to a thermal protecting circuit for the purpose of detecting temperature of a heater of semiconductor integrated circuit and for protecting from over-heat, or to a temperature sensing circuit for the purpose of detecting temperature of a semiconductor integrated circuit and adjusting a current flowing to the semiconductor integrated circuit. A conventional semiconductor integrated circuit has a heater for the purpose of outputting a heater signal of a level corresponding to the temperature of a substrate of the semiconductor integrated circuit. A measuring apparatus for detecting the temperature of the semiconductor integrated circuit is capable of operating only at a low temperature (10.degree. C. to 50.degree. C.) but difficult to operate at a high temperature (150.degree. C. to 250.degree. C.). Consequently, a conventional temperature sensing circuit is for the purpose of detecting the temperature of the heater.

To use the conventional temperature sensing circuit, an external resistor is necessary and a circuit for detecting the temperature of the semiconductor integrated circuit depends on the external resistor. An object of the present invention is to provide a semiconductor integrated circuit capable of operating at a high temperature and further a temperature detecting circuit for the semiconductor integrated circuit capable of operating at a high temperature and achieving a small size and a simple arrangement. So, we still don't have wireless charging, much less wireless power. But the deal with Apple appears to be getting both. Bloomberg on Friday reported that Apple has applied for
